Ayana B Burnett
Clinical Social Work/Therapist,
LCSW-C

Its draining isn't it? To address the day to day while carrying internal scars. You are so tired and just want the slightest sign of relief. Be it for you or your loved one, you are seeking more peace. You walk through your day to day. Get tasks done and move through mundane daily routine yet, dissatisfaction and pain shows up way too often... There is something invisible inside of you that is calling for more. More fun. More ease. More peace.

Licensed Professional Counselor,
LCPC, NCC

Our individual experiences play a role in shaping our personalities, how we see the world, and how we view ourselves. My goal is to help increase your self-awareness through self-exploration and world-exploration. This approach requires open mindedness, flexibility, and hard work. As a poet, I take a creative approach to nearly all I do, particularly therapy. Life is all about balance and therapy can be emotionally draining work. So I like to make therapy as fun and interesting as possible.

Denise Johnson
Clinical Social Work/Therapist
LCSW-C

My belief is that there is no one size fits all approach to treatment. My clients and I work together to figure out solutions that are best for them. I consider the clients as experts of their lives. I act as a facilitator providing clients with tools to help them help themselves.

My treatment experience includes working with issues such as PTSD, domestic violence, anxiety, ADHD, depression, psychotic disorders and adjustment issues.

You will find me a highly enthusiastic therapist with experience working with individuals and families with various backgrounds and concerns. Examples of issues that I have helped others address include balancing work life and personal life, stressors of coping with a chronic illness, survivors of trauma and those who may struggle with loneliness, life challenges and disappointments. I am passionate about caring for people and assisting them in achieving a state of well-being, and would welcome the opportunity to help you make your way forward to reach your desired goals.
